

Ed Nemore
Published January 2003

It is with great sadness that we also mourn the recent loss of member Dr. Edward Nemore. Both Keith and Ed succumbed to pancreatic cancer. When Dr. Nemore heard of Keith's tragic illness his reaction was concerned selflessness. He recognized the irony of their similar circumstance and was concerned for Keith's welfare. This really epitomized who Ed was as a person: a doctor right till his last breath, reviewing patients' charts and tests. Many of you may be familiar with his reasons for settling in our area to practice medicine with his wife, Dr. Jill Mortensen. Ed and Jill elected to come into an impoverished community (Port Norris) and serve those who needed help. People who eulogized Ed at his memorial service characterized him as big-hearted, ready to serve all in need, and driven by principle. Many spoke of his love for the river and his dedication to environmental causes. His membership in Greenpeace showed his desire not only to cure patients but to heal the earth as well. Ed was a devoted member of Citizens United and kept abreast of our activities. Early on, he participated in the task force to prevent our region from having a hazardous waste facility sited on property bordered by two remarkable rivers: the Menantico and Manumuskin. Our community and our membership will miss him. His wife, Jill, and their children, Eric and Sarah, are in our thoughts and prayers.

Each time someone leaves our ranks we are reminded of the short time we have to shape a positive future. Citizens United's members have played a significant role in the destiny of our local rivers. This year we have accomplished a great many things because of your support and participation. When we consider the many adverse consequences of poor planning and development we realize our job is so far from complete. It is rather an endless process of coordinated and combined vigilance that will determine the final character of our watershed. We cannot thank you often enough for the role you play in this endeavor.
